Tusculum College welcomes participants in the 2000 Theologian-in-Residence Program, featuring chief administrators at four Presbyterian seminaries: Union, Pittsburgh, Johnson C. Smith, and Louisville. These distinguished scholars and educators will speak on issues confronting the church in the 21st Century.

February 1, The Reverend Dr. Louis B. Weeks, Union Theological Seminary. Dr. Weeks has served as a pastor, missionary and teacher. A member of the Louisville Seminary faculty from 1970 to 1993, Weeks served as dean of that institution from 1982 to 1993. As president of Union-PSCF he has led the school in establishing a merit aid scholarship program and in the construction of the William Smith Morton Library. He is the author or editor of numerous books on denominational and faith issues.

February 8, The Reverend Dr. Carnegie Samuel Calian, Pittsburgh Theological Seminary. Dr. Calian began his association with Pittsburgh Seminary in 1981 as president and professor of theology. He had been on the faculty of Dubuque Theological Seminary since 1963. Dr. Calian is the author of several books, the latest of which is particularly related to this lecture series: Survival or Revival: Ten Keys to Church Vitality, from John Knox Press, 1998.

February 15, The Reverend Dr. David L. Wallace, Dean, Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary.

Not only is Dr. Smith dean of the seminary of Johnson C. Smith University, he is an alumnus as well, having earned the Bachelor of Arts and the Master of Divinity from that University. He also holds the Master of Science from Georgia State University and the Doctor of Divinity from McCormick Theological Seminary in Chicago, Illinois. He served as pastor of Church of the Master Presbyterian Church (USA) before joining the Johnson C. Smith faculty.

February 22, The Reverend Dr. John M. Mulder, Louisville Theological Seminary.

Dr. Mulder has served as president and professor of historical theology at Louisville Theological Seminary since 1981. He is the author or co-author of several books and essays on theology and church history, the most recent of which is Vital Signs: The Promise of Mainstream Protestantism, co-authored with Milton J. Coalter. Dr. Mulder is editor-in-chief of Family Ministry, a publication of the Center for Congregations and Family Ministry at Louisville Seminary.
